

Things have been moving quickly here in the New Media Institute. Since last semester's team left us with a photo journey through Athens, we've devised new ways to go even further in making Vintage Athens your app.

When you walk the streets of Athens, you can't help but be filled with a sense of comfort. No matter if you're an Athenian or a University of Georgia student, when you leave this town the town never leaves you. The people of Athens love their city, but they have no way to collect the historical memories of their town.

We've come up with a solution for that problem. Imagine if you could experience Athens' past through the stories and pictures of its people. Vintage Athens is an app dedicated to bringing those experiences to you at the tap of a button.

Vintage Athens is an app that allows the Athenian, the UGA student and anyone else who loves this town to immerse themselves in the past. Through its buildings and locations from years past, you can experience the way Athens was decades ago. The idea is that we take a popular building, like Sanford Stadium, and show a photo on a map from a different time. It is a walking museum. Athens evokes a nostalgic feeling from anyone who has ever been here and this app captures that in a tangible form. This is the city's app.

We want to put the control in your hands by enabling crowdsourcing capabilities. Got an old photo of the family church from the last century? Upload it to Vintage Athens and tell your story of why this location is so important to the city. Share the love you have for Athens with those who adore it the way you do. Vintage Athens makes our history universal.
